LOCATION

Located in a discreet valley 2 miles from the pleasant coastal village of Aberaeron. Aberystwyth is 16 miles to the north and Lampeter 10 miles to the south west.

DESCRIPTION

Allt Hengeraint is a partially replanted broadleaved woodland occupying the east facing slopes of a tranquil valley. The elevation range is from 50 to 150 metres above sea level. Substantial parts of the wood are classified as Ancient Woodland, indicating that the woodland has existed on the site since at least 1600.

The felling of ash and conifer over the last 10 years has been followed by planting and establishment of native broadleaved trees complemented by large mature trees retained during felling. The work was completed under a Better Woodland for Wales (BWW) scheme in 2010. Further felling and replanting was undertaken in 2016. Thus, this Ancient Woodland has been re-established from its former conifer cover and now hosts a substantial stocking of birch, oak and chestnut. The establishment of trees is in two age classes with one at canopy closure 3 metres tall and the other emerging from the vegetation. Under the conditions of the felling licence the planting was specified at 1600 stems per hectare, and we have observed a much higher stocking due to the abundance of natural regeneration occurring on these rich brown soils.

The felling cleared much of the woodland but there remains a high number of mature broadleaves in pockets and groups, much of which occupy the more challenging terrain. This retains many of the mature woodland features and provides value in the remaining timber. There are occasional regenerating fir and some mature pines on the edges providing further contrast and diversity. This makes the woodland attractive for amenity as well as for the casual forester.

The tracks provide 4-wheel drive access to almost all areas of the woodland and are a substantial benefit that contributes to the value and attractiveness of the wood. These tracks are narrow and steep in places where they follow the terrain and should not detract from the overall benefits they offer.

The entrance to the wood (point A on the sale plan) is from a layby created when the main road was straightened. It attracts weary drivers, but it serves great access to the wood and provides a safe point from which to harvest and extract the timber.

There is an attractive small stream running through the wood from the fields above. The water goes into a culvert under the layby and passes into the river Aeron at the bottom of the valley. The wood was originally part of the Llanerchaeron Estate which is now owned by the National Trust. Walking along the southern track there are commanding views. The valley widens and gives way to an impressive landscape of open fields, woodland and, at the centre, the manor house set within the estate grounds.

At the bottom of the wood near to the road there is a concrete pill-box bunker built for the Home Guard Defence Force during the Second World War. This is scheduled as an Ancient Monument. Details are available from Cadw.gov.wales.
